ALTIZER AND FALKENBERG SOLD TO NAPS FOR $10,000

Cantillon Finally Disposes of Infielder and Pitcher to Cleveland Club at Big Sum-Both Erratic and Practically Useless Here-Unglaub to Do the Utility Roles Now.

Dave Altizer and Fred Falkenberg were yesterday sold by the Washington ball club to the Cleveland Naps for $10,000.

From the day that he returned from the training trip in the spring of 1907, Joe Cantillon was anxious to dispose of the two players, but no club was willing to give enough to make the deal worth the while. When Elberfeld was made manager of the Highlanders it was thought that he would be willing to buy the pair, but he said he had no immediate use for such men as the two Nationals and it was not until the Naps were here last week that Cantillon got down to talk real business with Larry Lajole. Lajole wired Cleveland, recommending that the pair be bought, and yesterday Owner Kilfoyl agreed to pay what is probably a record price for two players who can hardly be classed as real stars.

While no other players figured directly in the sale yesterday, it was practically the third side of the deal by which the Nationals obtained Bob Unglaub, as part of the $10,000 will be paid to the Boston club for their former captain, who has not yet earned a regular position here.

The sale of Altizer and Falkenberg completes Cantillon's campaign of ridding the club of all the undesirables who made up the collection left here by Jake Stahl. While both of the new Naps have many friends in Washington, neither is the type of ball player Cantillon considers desirable for a ball club. The present manager has endeavored each time a change has been made to gather in men who are fighters and willing to sacrifice their own playing for the sake of winning.

DISSENSION AMONG CUBS?

Chicago, July 23.—Recent defeats of the Cubs have started anew the reports that dissension among individuals of the world's champions is responsible for the slump which has dumped the Westsiders into third place in the National League pennant race.

Now that the Champs are in third place these "wise ones" are busily engaged in spreading their I-told-you-so's among those who have declined to put faith in their stories several weeks ago.

The players themselves are quick to deny that there is internal trouble, but the rumors continue to come from the alleged friends of some of these same players, so the followers of the club and others who are interested in the welfare of the team will have to draw their own conclusions.
